

Clarification Regarding Copyright to Your Trade Name

By Anna Von Reitz

A lot of people have been confused about claiming their name using State Session Laws. The example I am posting here is for a name in Alaska--- but every state in the Union has similar provisions. You simply have to search your own state's Session Laws (not Statutes-- Session Laws) or hire a Paralegal to search the material related to Assumed Names to find your state's retained remedy.

To a limited extent you can use this example as a template:

Since this is issued in international land jurisdiction, you can use the citations from Washington and Alaska above to claim equal treatment under the law even if you can't find the similar Session Law in your state of the Union. It would just be stronger if you add your own Session Law in support of the claim.
